Valley West Villa

This villa is a mix between the Queenslander and the Malay house styles, with broad wrap-around verandah, spacious garden bathrooms and colonial-Dutch interiors. Items from Wijaya's personal art collection and various historical prints are on display in this villa, which are the most spacious and private in the compound.

Valley East Villa

This villa is a mix between the Queenslander and the Malay house styles, with broad wrap-around verandah, spacious garden bathrooms and colonial-Dutch interiors. Items from Wijaya's personal art collection and various historical prints are on display in this villa, which are the most spacious and private in the compound.

Croissant Cottage

In 1980 French heiress and Balinese dance aficionado Agnes Yeti commissioned Wijaya to design a cottage in the former garden of musicologist Colin McPhee, adjacent to Villa Made. Wijaya had always loved the colonial 'Queenslander' style of Australian country house, wrapped with wide verandah ; this became the inspiration for the house. The interiors are a unique Franco-Javo-Balinese blend. Architect Peter Muller and his wife stayed in Croissant Cottage when there designing and building the legendary Amandari hotel just up the road.

Malay Villa

Wijaya is an authority on regional architect and wanted in this villa to showcase the elegant bungalow style of Trengganu in Malaysia, the home of some of Malaysia's most handsome colonial/traditional buildings. The interiors feature textiles by Lady Victoria Waymouth, and many antique pieces. An airy, independent bath-house, connected to the house, has a great view across the river valley. The bungalow has a wide view-side verandah. Francis and Eleanor Coppola stayed in the Malay House while conceptualizing their Belize beach hotel, The Turtle Inn.

Royal Villa

This villa was built on the site of musicologist Colin McPhee's original 1950s Bali home, as featured in his book 'A House in Bali'. Built in the Balinese Majapahit (red brick) style the villa overlooks the hotel northern swimming pool and the Ayung River valley beyond. This villa features a very private bathroom garden with valley views.

Made Villa

Villa Made was writer/landscaper Made Wijaya's original Sayan home, designed by Wijaya in the mountain style he calls Bali-Baronial. The thatched, split-level villa has a full Bathroom on each floor and a small kitchenette. It is one of the most dramatically sited mountain view villas in Bali. The architecture style is rustic-sliding Japanese style screen walls and dark Jaka Palm floors, with coconut wood columns – but the interiors are contemporary and comfortable. There is a small swimming pool adjacent this villa and a Balinese kitchen on an upper terrace where dinners can be served, under the stars, Sayan style. Villa Made has for ten years been the summer retreat of photographer Tim Street-Porter and his writer artist wife Annie Kelly.

Presidential Suite

In 1995, Made Wijaya wanted a new house to showcase the view and was keen to flex some architectural muscle on a neighboring site. With his partners Gusti Sarjana and Nyoman Miyoga a 'Presidential Suite' was conceived in a style that could be called 'power dressing'. I wanted to do a substantial house that would be a new direction for traditional Balinese architecture and also our office's decorative clout. The land's three gentle terraces were turned into a dramatic two, with a lozenge-shaped lap-pool taking up most of the lower terrace. Three traditional structures were then built on the sizeable upper terrace.
